

Kevin A. Feeley
President

Bellevue Communications Group

As President of Bellevue Communications Group, which he co-founded in 2000, Kevin Feeley brings more than 30 years of experience in communications, law, and government to the practice of public and community relations. Bellevue's development draws on this experience to provide crisis communications, strategic public relations counsel and effective community outreach on behalf of clients from the corporate, non-profit and public sectors in the Philadelphia area. The firm's clients include Citizens Bank, Temple University Health System, Comcast, Comcast-Spectacor, the National Constitution Center, and nearly 50 other companies or organizations.

From 1992 to 2000, Kevin served as Deputy Mayor for Communications for Mayor Edward G. Rendell. In that capacity, he helped to shape press coverage for the Rendell Administration, serving as the Mayor's spokesman and developing working relationships with reporters and editors at every major media outlet in the Philadelphia region. In addition, Kevin worked on the front lines of municipal government, spearheading Administration initiatives in a wide variety of areas, including housing, environmental safety, Internet access, and graffiti removal.

Prior to serving in the Rendell Administration, Kevin practiced law in Philadelphia at Drinker Biddle & Reath, and at Clark Ladner Fortenbaugh & Young. Before that, he worked as a journalist in the Greater Philadelphia region, including stints at The News-Journal in Wilmington, Del., and The Philadelphia Journal. In addition, Kevin served as a freelance correspondent for USA Today, Gannett News Service, and Newsweek. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and Temple University Law School, and a 1973 graduate of Girard College in Philadelphia.

Kevin, his wife Lisa and their three children live in Philadelphia.